Molloy College B.A. English Program
Write your own masterpiece for success in the undergraduate English program. Our graduates go on to teach at every level, they succeed as lawyers, excel as journalists, accomplish as writers, and get the job done as editors and business managers. Immersed in the currents of British, American and Anglophile literatures, you’ll grasp the history of these literatures and the important human issues they raise, while learning to write creatively in their spirit.

As an English major at Molloy, you’ll benefit from a broad-based curriculum. You’ll gain a thorough experience of the English and American literary traditions, the roots of Western literature in Greek and Roman drama, comedy and epic, the essentials of literary criticism, the Shakespeare canon and a major author, literary period or genre. You’ll have ample opportunity to strengthen and hone basic and advanced composition and communication skills through a wide variety of writing and speaking courses.

St. John’s University M.A. English

The M.A. in English at St. John’s University offers students a broad and intensive engagement with literary, cultural, and writing studies. Distinguished faculty members teach courses in traditional and emerging fields of literature, cultural studies, and critical theory, writing, and composition studies.

With strong backgrounds in pedagogy, theory, writing, literary and cultural studies developed through the program, graduates have gone on to pursue doctoral degrees in English, teach English on the secondary level, or enter the professional spheres of publishing, public relations, and education administration. The abilities to think critically, write effectively, and engage with intellectual discourse serve students well—as both academics and professionals—in a wide range of fields.
