Molloy College B.A. Theology Program

The spiritual dimension of the human person is a basic element of human identity; thus religious experience has been a central dimension of all human cultures. In today's globalized world, religious literacy is essential for all educated persons. For this reason, both theology and religious studies play an indispensable role in a liberal arts curriculum.

The Theology & Religious Studies major at Molloy prepares students to understand and engage intelligently the breadth of human religious experience in today's culturally diverse world. The major is interdisciplinary and integrative, offering opportunities to study with faculty who explore pressing contemporary issues such as world religions and ecology, theology and new media, religion and the arts, cultural globalization, and social justice.

St. John's University M.A. Theology

St. John's University's graduate program in Theology combines the academic rigor of a world-class university with lively concern for informed and effective pastoral ministry in the 21st-century Church. The 33-credit Master of Arts program is designed to allow students flexibility in shaping the specific focus of their graduate studies, with concentration options in Biblical Studies, Pastoral Theology, or Theological Studies (which includes history, moral theology, systematic theology, and inter-faith studies).

Some continue their studies with doctoral degrees in theology or professional degrees in law or medicine. Recent alumni of the program have applied their degrees in such varied settings as Winthrop University Hospital, CUNY, the Catholic Parish of New York, Chaminade High School, and Good Shepherd Hospice. They have careers as religion teachers, chaplains, campus ministers, priests, professors, and religious directors for a wide range of organizations.
