

What Matters Most and Implementing Goals of Care for Individuals with Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities Supported by OPWDD

*1.5 hours for Social Work CEU's will be given for this session.

In Person Only

Presenters: Dr. Lindsey Semprini, MD, Palliative Medicine, Northwell Health & Christine Gallo, LCSW, GC-C, YTT, Palliative Medicine, PBMC-Northwell Health

Summary: Persons with Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities are a vulnerable population for many reasons, and this can be compounded by multiple factors particularly as they and those that support them navigate the world of health care, advanced illness journeys and end of life care. Join two Northwell Health Social Workers as they share an enlightening education on the rich legacy of this population's historical movement through healthcare, tips and guidance on how to navigate vital legal processes involved in end of life decision making and planning, and lastly how they spread education and awareness for advocacy and elevation of care for these patients served within their health system and how you too can impact meaningful change.

Objectives:

1. Participants will learn about the history of institutionalization, medical abuse and neglect that were inherent in the origins of care of individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities which was followed by the deinstitutionalization movement, grounded in self-determination and person-centered care.
2. Participants will gain awareness of the regulatory processes in place to protect this population, the knowledge gaps that can serve as barriers, and walk through general guidelines for meeting these regulations while also achieving timely implementation of person-centered goals of care.
3. Participants will learn of creative progress and resources for supporting and advocating for this vulnerable population as they and their families and group home support staff navigate advanced illness and end of life.
